

Masha Sumnina: Complementary colors data.

Get some red berries of your choice.

Find a bench. The average crowdness of the place is up to you and depends on your desire of activity and connection with the world passing by.

Sit on the bench for an hour.

Every time you see a person which has some green colored piece of clothes on them - eat one red berry.

So it is a data art, results of which will be hid deep in yourself.

I sat down at a rather busy "bench" at a statue of Willem van Oranje (orange)

In stead of berries I had tray of cherries.

A lot of people were passing by and many of them wore something green so I had to eat lots of cherries.

It felt rather hard for me to be "a follower" and not decide myself whether I ate a cherry or not.

I wanted to follow the instructions but started to feel sick. I decided to move to a more quiet place.

I felt myself stuffed up with cherries. All red inside.

At once I had an association with red blood on a green surgical shirt. It made me really feel green and sick.

I couldn't eat more cherries.

This was a nauseating experiment for me.

I sat down at a rather busy ~~place~~ "bench" at the stake of Willem v. Oranje.

A lot of people did wear 'green' so I ate much cherry's.

I was aware of the coldness of the cherries in my warm mouth. A complementary sensation.

So I didn't decide myself whether I ate a cherry but I had to follow the instruction.

I wanted to be cooperative but start feeling sick so I decide to move to a ~~quiet~~ quiet(?) place.

At once I had an association with red blood on a green surgical shirt.

I couldn't eat more cherries.
